It is a queer case and the force of social pressure in Ellenville and vicinity may be gauged by the fact, that though the double ended scandal has been public property for months, neither of the local papers alluded to it, even in the heat of the campaign, until it came regularly before the court. The Hon. Isaac N. Cox, when he was plain Mr. Cox in 1878, paid his addresses to Mrs. Sarah Melville, a widow employed in the Terwilliger house. According to her testimony and that of her friends, he was very devoted, promised marriage and to various tender missives signed himself "Your Ikey." Much to the people's sur-prise on Jan. 5, 1888, he married Miss Liz-zie Stoddard, of Mountaindale, Sullivan county. The deserted widow brought suit, which was delayed by a most remarkable series of accidents—one lawyer died, another ran off and two others declined to

During all this time, according to Mr. and Mrs. Cox, their house and grounds had been defiled as aforesaid. There were twenty-six distinct outrages, and so many lady callers had their dresses injured that the secret could not be kept, though they strangely enough, took no legal action. At length they employed one James Thorpe to watch, and one fine evening last October he grabbed Mrs. Melville in front swore that he caught Mrs. Melville in the act of dashing linseed oil on the gate, and Mrs. Cox swore that from the window she saw a woman throw something; that she rushed out and found Mrs M. gling in the grasp of Thorpe. Mrs. Melville proved that she was going on a per-fectly legitimate errand, and that her dress and bands were free from any sign of oil. It also turned out that Thorpe was a doubtful character, so it is the oath of one woman against another—the suc-cessfully married against the jilted one. All Ellenville is mightily excited, and the district generally.
